These boys are walking in a city. Raindrops are falling. They hold an umbrella to stay dry. They are eating shiny red apples that look like they taste good. In fact, they look delicious. This boy is telling his friend about his memories of the place he moved from. He remembers playing in the desert with his neighbor and watching lizards. As he describes it to his friend, he feels homesick and a little sad because he misses the desert and his neighbor. He had to say farewell to them when he moved across the country. The boy with the dog thinks the desert plants sound curious, but the other boy says they were not strange. The friend wants to know about the airport. The friend wants to know if this boy likes his new home in the city.
